

ALBERTA'S FIRST LEGISLATURE WAS OPENED YESTERDAY

Thistle Rink Crowded by Citizens and Visitors at the Historic Function

The first legislature of the Province of Alberta opened yesterday before what was probably the largest gathering of citizens that has attended the opening ceremonies of any provincial legislative body in the Dominion of Canada. When the lieutenant-governor took his chair yesterday there were at least four thousand people in the Thistle rink, and many who came late were unable to gain admittance to the hall.

Edmonton entertained more visitors within her gates yesterday than at any time since the inauguration ceremonies. Every train arriving in the city for forty-eight hours previous to the opening was loaded to the guards and the hotel accommodation of the city was taxed to the limit last night, while legislators and their friends who came in on the late trains were fortunate to find a hall or a shake-down in the parlor.

The opening ceremony was simple in the extreme. The doors of the rink opened at 2.15, exactly 15 minutes ahead of the announced time, but even as early as that there were hundreds waiting to get in and by 2.30 the place was crowded. The members of the legislature arrived and took their seats a few moments before 3 o'clock, and every desk was occupied except that of Dr. DeVos, who has been called to the Senate at Ottawa. As the members were coming in Attorney-General Cross was seen to have a few moments consultation with the two Conservative members and Representative Robertson of High River, took the seat at the right of the speaker's desk, indicating thereby that he would be leader of the Conservative party throughout the session.

The lieutenant-governor, accompanied by his suite, arrived at 3 o'clock sharp, and after the ceremonial of appointing the speaker the speech from the throne was read. Premier Rutherford appointed a committee to frame rules for the guidance of the House during the session, and another committee to strike the standing committee. Messrs. Cross, McKenney, Moore, Hiebert and Walker constituted the first committee and the premier and Messrs. Cushing, Bredin, Puffer and Robertson composed the second. The premier then made the regular pro forma motion and the house adjourned to meet on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

From the rink, most of the members and a great many of the visitors proceeded to the Mackay avenue school, where the premier held his reception.

SOCIETY AT THE OPENING

Our massive auditorium presented a brilliant spectacle yesterday afternoon when our first legislature was declared open by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Bulger. Long before two o'clock the galleries and floor of the house (as it were) were rapidly filling, and by three o'clock standing room was at a premium. As the ladies were in the majority, the costumes of the ladies, of course, predominated, the result being a pleasing and harmonious mass of color. It was interesting to see the men whose names have been so prominent before us, gather to their duties, and it was clearly evident that the responsibility of office was realized by many.

THEY WILL MINE COAL ON AN EXTENSIVE SCALE

Rat Portage Lumbermen Take Options on Edmonton Property and Look for Heavy Contracts

Walter Ross and F. C. Hall, of Kenora, the founders and heaviest stockholders of the Rat Portage Lumber Co., have been in the city for the past few days on what may be business of great importance for Edmonton. Rumors have been floating about the city for the past few days, which Mr. Ross confirmed last night, that he and his partner along with some eastern capitalists intend to go into the coal mining business here on a large scale and put the industry on a proper basis.

Mr. Ross was seen at the Alberta last night and when asked if it was a fact that he was interesting himself in the coal mining business here, said that he was here to see what could be done. He had taken options, he said on certain coal lands, the location of which he refused to give, and he was now going to Winnipeg to negotiate with the heads of the railways to see what could be done in the way of contract. If he secured contracts, the options would be taken up and the work commenced right away to lay out for coal mining on a very large scale. Mr. Ross said that it was no small thing that they were figuring on, and that if they made arrangements to go ahead there would be a very large expenditure in this vicinity, probably not less than half a million dollars. He states that there will be no stock on the market as he and his friends are ready to put in all the capital necessary. The developments foreshadowed by the arrival of Messrs. Ross and Hall on the scene here are what have been foreseen here by coal men for many months past. The tests by the Canadian Northern have proven that the Edmonton coal is practicable for rail-roaming purposes and the only reason at the present time that the coal supply for that road is being brought in from Blairmore is that the mines here are not in a position to get the coal out of the ground. At the present time there are no mines working on the track and the total production of the mines within four or five miles of the town is not over 100 or 200 tons a day. Practically speaking, the industry is only in its infancy and until large capital is put in and the works prosecuted in immediate proximity to the railway on a large scale no large contracts could be placed here by the companies. It has been evident for some time past that the necessities of the Canadian Northern alone would be sufficient to induce heavy capital to develop the coal resources of the Edmonton district on a large scale and there is no doubt that the coal mining business of this vicinity is going to undergo a great change in the immediate future—a change such as will substitute for the crude necessarily small methods which have prevailed in the past a system of mining similar to Fernie and Lethbridge. Edmonton is undoubtedly due to become the coal centre of the whole north-western country and the arrival of Messrs. Ross and Hall indicates that the change is coming soon.

Mr. Ross and Mr. Hall left together over the C. & E. for Winnipeg this morning.

Avoided Dangerous Resolution

Ottawa, Mar. 15.—MacDonnell, of Toronto moved a resolution today expressing sympathy with the persecuted Jews in Russia. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, while expressing the same sympathy and having taken part in a public meeting for this purpose, said the Canadian Parliament, not being a sovereign power, ought not to pass such a resolution upon a matter which concerned Britain and her foreign relations. The debate adjourned.

Referring to amendments to the election law, Mr. MacDonnell made a strong protest against the way in which the Manitoba Government treated the franchise issue. A committee will deal with this. There may be anti-cigarette legislation.

CONVICTED OF MANSLAUGHTER

Winnipeg Negro Barber Caused the Death of Another Colored Man

Winnipeg, Mar. 15.—John S. Clay, the Negro barber, charged with the murder of W. H. Cooper, another colored man was yesterday convicted of manslaughter at the Winnipeg assizes. During the interval, while the jury was out considering the case, a dramatic scene occurred, a sister of the prisoner offering an impassioned plea before the crowded court room to the Almighty for her brother's life. The prisoner has been twice before charged with using a razor in assaults. Sentence as usual was deferred until the end of the assizes.

MAYOR RETURNS FROM MONTREAL

Mayor May, Ald. Griesbach, and City Solicitor Beck returned from Ottawa and Montreal on last night's C. N. R. express, where they have been for the past three weeks on railway and governmental business for the city. The mayor stated this morning that he thought that they would be able to make a satisfactory arrangement with the government with regard to the post office here, the mail service on the C. N. R. and all other questions affecting the city which the government will have to deal with in the immediate future. They had a very pleasant trip, the mayor says, and spent most of their time in Montreal, where they met the managers of the three railways entering and about to enter the city, and had several important conferences with them on subjects relating to the city's future.

THE PREMIER'S MOTION

In his motion to appoint the speaker at the opening of the legislature yesterday Premier Rutherford said: It is an honor, a high honor, to be members of the First Legislature of the Province of Alberta. We are today entering upon the task of laying the foundations of empire in this new land.

We will be called upon to solve for this great Province of Alberta many new and difficult problems. It is expected that we will prove ourselves equal to the task of their solution. It is expected that we will enact and carry into effect measures that will be to the lasting advantage of the people of this province, and for their welfare.

On the other hand many matters will come before us for determination in which the path has not been blazed out for us. It is right, it is proper, that we should follow the good traditions, the good precedents of the Legislatures of the old Provinces of Canada, the House of Commons of our Dominion, and the House of Commons of the motherland, the Mother of Parliaments under constitutional, under responsible government. Following a good example we will proceed without delay to the election of Speaker. The duties of Speaker are various and important. He is the mouthpiece of the House. It is the duty of the First Commoner to preside over our deliberations. He is responsible for enforcing the observance of order and decorum among the members. We should expect that he will mete out uniform and fair treatment to all the parties, to all the members.

Charles Wellington Fisher, Member for the electoral district of Banff, is to my mind well qualified to fill the position. He is not new to legislative experience. Those of us who sat with him in the last Legislative Assembly of the N. W. T. learned that he possessed a kindly disposition, a fair and judicial mind. He will doubtless fulfill the duties pertaining to the high and honorable office of speaker creditably and to the satisfaction of the members of this House.

I therefore beg to move, seconded by Hon. Mr. Cross that Chas. Wellington Fisher, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Banff, do take the chair as speaker.

TRAGIC DEATH NEAR PONOKA

Child Wanders Into the Bush and Dies From Exposure

Ponoka, Mar. 15.—A very sad and distressing death took place in the Earlville district, near Ponoka, on Monday, whereby the two-year old child of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Miller lost its life.

It appears that the little fellow along with his brother, had gone out to play in the afternoon, and shortly the eldest boy, aged five, returned to the house. No notice was taken for a few minutes, till the mother became a little anxious and commenced a search. Not till five in the morning were they rewarded with success, when the child was found lying unconscious in the bush. He was carried home and medical aid summoned with all speed, but before the doctor arrived life had become extinct. Great sympathy is extended to the parents in their sad loss.

STOCK JUDGING CLASSES

There were large attendances again at yesterday's session of the stock judging schools both morning and afternoon. Dr. Standish in the morning spoke on the subject of light horses. A splendid specimen of a light horse was brought before the class and the undesirable features pointed out. Dr. Standish laid particular stress on the statement that size and substance were a necessity in the make-up of a good light horse.

Duncan Anderson in the afternoon dealt with the subject of best cattle and gave a good address upon the conformation of the animal which was exhibited before the class. The speakers left last night for Well-askin, where the next sessions will be held.

Through Canada to the Arctic.

The Annual Trip of the Hudson's Bay Company's Steamer "Wrigley" from Fort Simpson to the Mouth of the Mackenzie River.

(Winnipeg Free Press)

Far up to the north of Canada, and far beyond the confines of civilization, every summer there piles on the Mackenzie River from Great Slave Lake to within a hundred miles of the Arctic ocean, the steamer Wrigley, which in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company carries supplies to the different forts of the company and brings as a return cargo the pelts of Canada's most valuable fur-bearing animals. This annual seven thousand mile trip is made down one of the largest rivers on the continent and through one of the largest tracts of unsettled lands in the world. The only inhabitants north of Great Slave Lake are the native Indians, mostly a squalid, shiftless class who trap and barter their furs with the traders of the company; the trappers who spend their lives far from home and friends, and the missionaries who labor unselfishly in the cause of religion among these people. All the labor of the different classes of people in this cheerless region is with one object in view, viz that the shoulders of the wealthy and noble may be adorned with the pelts of rare animals which are only secured where the destroying foot of civilization has not trod. The Wrigley is only one of the many steamboats that the company has built for transportation on the northern rivers and lakes, but it is distinguished as being the largest of the fleet and making the longest voyage. When it was considered that a country more than a thousand miles square is dotted with posts of the company, and that besides the trappers actually at work collecting furs, there are hundreds of people indirectly employed as a result of their labors, the wealth and influence of the Hudson's Bay Company is at once seen. There are other companies prosecuting the fur trade in the north and other small steamers ply on the Mackenzie river, but they are but small in comparison to the pioneer company, which has been running a steam-driven boat up and down the river for twenty years past.

The Wrigley, around which this story centres, was built at Fort Smith by the employees of the company in the winter of 1894-7. The predecessor of the present boat had the same name, but was smaller, and was built at the same place. Fort Smith is about sixty miles south of Great Slave Lake, and in a latitude of sixty degrees, and more than six hundred miles north of the international boundary line. The Wrigley is sixty-six tons register and built of native spruce and tamarack. She is eighty-four feet in keel, with a sixteen foot beam and a hold eight feet in depth. Being built especially for river transportation, the boat draws only six feet of water, which renders it safe in almost any part of the river along the route. The equipment consists of a propeller driven by steam from high pressure locomotive boilers. A crew of eleven men is carried and there is stateroom accommodation for six passengers. The fuel used on the trip is the same variety of wood as the boat, and is obtained along the banks which are well wooded along the whole course.

From the time the Wrigley is put into commission in June until she is drawn up again for the winter in October, there is practically no darkness, and on the whole trip down and up the river no time is ever lost in loading or unloading. The two-hour nights are hardly distinguishable from the day on account of the bright twilight, and the illuminating effect of the aurora borealis. There is never an hour during the voyage when the light is not bright enough for the reading of an ordinary print while sitting on the deck. The Wrigley is laid up for the winter at Willow River, a tributary of the Mackenzie, one hundred and forty miles southeast of Fort Simpson, the headquarters of the company in the north. As soon as the ice breaks up in the spring the boat is withdrawn from its winter quarters, and after being thoroughly overhauled, it is steamed up to Fort Simpson, and is made ready for the long voyage. As a preliminary to the long run to the Arctic a five days' run is made up the Mackenzie to Great Slave Lake, and thence up Slave river to Fort Smith, taking on the way Fort Providence, Hay River and Fort Resolution. There is no freight on the southward trip, and save for missionaries returning to their homes, or paying visits to the missions or forts, the boat is empty. At Fort Smith a package of great importance to the residents of the northland is taken on board, consisting of the yearly mail of newspapers which are never carried on the dog train on account of their great bulk. Letters also are of course taken, but the summer letter packet is not of so great value as the winter one, when it carries the only reading matter seen for twelve months. As all the freight for the north has to be portaged for a distance of sixteen miles, just south of Fort Smith, a slight delay is occasioned, and usually the final instalment of freight is not allowed in the hold until the second day of July.

On the passage down the Slave river to the lake, a distance of 196 miles, the land near the river is very sandy, and the woods run down close to the water's edge. When crossing Great Slave Lake immense fields of ice are usually found floating even at mid-summer. The lake is two hundred miles in length and one hundred miles wide, and the trip across it is most exhilarating. On the south and west shores of the lake are great tracts of muskeg of so dangerous a nature that it is very dangerous to travel on foot as a false step means sure death to the unwary one if alone.

The only elevation of any importance on the south of the lake is Little Buffalo mountain, which takes its name from a small river which empties into Slave Lake near the mouth of the Slave river. Just across the lake, where the Mackenzie flows from the lake is another mountain, standing like a grim sentinel in the great "barren land." On clear days it may be seen for a distance of forty miles, and is used as a landmark though it is fifteen miles inland. The rumble of thunder is rarely ever heard in this northern land and through the summer snow seldom falls. Three years ago snow fell to the depth of three inches on the deck of the Wrigley during the trip, on July 16, which broke all records for late snow falls.

On Salt river, sixteen miles southeast of Fort Smith, is the famous salt spring, where immense quantities of the purest salt are stored up by the natural evaporation of the saline waters of the district. The entire district covered by the company in the north is supplied with salt from these springs. There is another salt supply farther north but not so convenient as Salt river. West of Fort Norman, distant a two day's journey by dog team, there is a large mountain of pure salt. The crystals in this formation are the characteristic cubes, no matter how finely broken, showing the purity of the deposit.

No return from Fort Smith, the next port of call is Fort Resolution, the largest settlement north of Fort Chipewyan, with a population, including the treaty Indians, of about three hundred souls. A Roman Catholic nunnery and mission school are maintained at Fort Resolution for the education of the Indians and the children of any Catholic traders or employees of the company.

The children of Protestant parents are usually sent to Hay River, if they are located at any of the forts near Slave Lake. The mission at Fort Resolution operates an up-to-date saw-mill for the manufacture of what lumber is needed and also for sale to the traders and the company. After a stop of a few hours the journey is continued and the next place where the anchor is dropped is at Hay River, a small trading post of the company where the most successful Protestant mission in Northern Canada is maintained. The boat hastens on the Fort Providence, the most southerly fort on the Mackenzie River. Here is another mission and the largest nunnery that has yet been established along the river. Eight nuns under a mother superior are in charge of the mission, at which there are at times as many as seventy-five children in training.

Just below Fort Providence the moose country begins, and the majestic forest kings are often seen on the bank, surveying the noisy, smoke producing Leviathan of the river in great amazement. Their amazement is short-lived, for they often fall before the unerring aim of the crew, who are always glad to secure such a coveted addition to their larder. If a moose is seen near enough to be easily secured a stop is made and one or two of the crew are allowed a short time to bring him in, as the captain is in too great a hurry to waste much time even for the pleasure of shooting one of these animals. Good moose grounds extend along the river as far north as Fort Norman, but the choicest spot is just below Fort Wrigley, near the "Rock by the River," which is described later on.

Continuing northward the region of the Slave Indians is entered a short distance above Fort Simpson. They are a great improvement on the Crees and Chipewyans of farther south, and are about the only Indians seen until Fort Norman is reached. Fort Simpson is the last stop on the preliminary trip. Fort Simpson, being the district headquarters, has the largest staff of the company's officials in the north, consisting of the gentleman in charge of the district, as he is called in Hudson's Bay parlance, chief accountant, the captain and engineer of the steamer, and a couple of clerks. A complete electric lighting plant was installed here in 1896, to light the fort and the immense storehouses of the company, where, until recently, the

A NEEDED LEGAL AMENDMENT

J. K. McInnis having been found guilty of libel the Calgary Herald wants the libel laws revised. This may be only a sign of sympathy with the Regina man or it may be a sign that the Herald has been pursuing its files and has located the raw material for a few similar actions against its honored self. Finding the realm of truth and fairness quite ample for its purposes, the Bulletin declines to join the Herald in a campaign for the destruction of the legal safeguards which protect the character of public men from the attacks of an unscrupulous press but would be willing to endorse its Calgary contemporary in a movement to make it a criminal offence for the Herald to steal news verbatim from the Bulletin without leave, license, credit or apology.

AN ATTACK ON THE JUDGES

One of the most serious developments of political controversy in Canada during recent years has been the campaign of systematic and persistent abuse of the judges which has been carried on by the Conservative press of the Western provinces during the past few months. It would perhaps be injudicious to omit saying that there may be Conservative journals in Alberta and Saskatchewan which have not participated in these assaults, but these exceptions to the rule have not been numerous enough to be noticeable, while the readiness with which some of the supposed non-combatants have applauded and echoed the vilifications of their more daring fellows indicates that their abstention was due less to an inclination to do justice to the judges than to a disinclination to incur the responsibility for so doing. But such considerations of responsibility have borne weight with few of the Opposition organs and the occasions on which the rank and file of the Conservative press has not assailed the judges or on which such assaults have not been waged with all the fury at the command of the scribblers have been few enough to be conspicuous.

This attack on the judges is the latest development of the campaign of extravagance and misrepresentation to which the western Conservatives set their hands and which they carried to a termination in the catastrophe in Saskatchewan. Discredited and defeated at the polls they sought solace in insinuations that their defeat had been composed by the rascality of their opponents rather than the judgement of the electorate. But their troubles did not end there. The findings of the courts deprived them of the consolation of this pleasant delusion. In the philosophy of the western Conservatives whoever and whatever does not conduce to their success regardless of fact or reason is worthy of all condemnation. Wherefore war was declared upon the courts and has been continued with a fury which reached its zenith in the censure heaped upon Judge Prendergast for his refusal to disregard the limitations of the election act and turn the Prince Albert re-count into a trial of the stupid criminals who invalidated the election in that constituency.

The boast of Canada has been and is a judiciary of high character absolutely freed from all political relationships which might be supposed to exert or might be liable to exert an improper influence on their administration of justice. That the conduct of the judges generally has warranted the confidence reposed in them and the high claim made for them is freely admitted by Canadians regardless of party lines and if there have been exceptions to the rule the actions of the judges who have been called upon to investigate election cases in the North West have certainly not furnished those exceptions. Neither the conduct nor the result of such cases afford any ground for impugning the impartiality of the judges before whom they were tried and the onslaught of the Opposition press is the more unjustifiable in that it is unwarranted. The maintenance of the good name of the judiciary is of more consequence than the gratification of the partisan bitterness of a disgruntled press and the hope of the situation is that the character of the assailants may be sufficiently well understood that the only consequences of their crusade will be public disgust at the authors rather than an unwarranted shaking of public confidence in the integrity of the victims.

THROUGH NORTHERN CANADA.

goods for all the northern forts were stored. Now the goods are all taken up in the steamer on her summer trip. The river at this point is about a mile in width, and further north it varies from three hundred and fifty yards to seven miles a short distance below Fort Providence. The Laird and other rivers from the west bring down large quantities of mud, and the great Mackenzie takes on a reddish hue after it passes Fort Simpson, and by the time it reaches the ocean the waters are almost thick with the amount of mud held in solution. As the amount of mud season is required to make the trip to the most distant fort, no time is lost, and after the necessary delay at Fort Simpson the prow is again turned northward, and the long journey through a wild rugged country is fairly begun. The run to Fort Wrigley, a distance of 134 miles, is made in eleven hours, as the current for the greater part of the way is swift and there are no obstructions. Just before reaching Fort Wrigley the steamer passes Mount Cammell, in the Nahanni range, which extends along the river bank from the Nahanni river to the fort. The peak is 3,800 feet in height, and for the greater part of the summer is snow-capped.

To Fort Norman is another eleven-hour trip, though it is one hundred and seventy-eight miles, but the current grows stronger. In some places the water runs as fast as seven miles an hour. At a distance of twenty-five miles below Fort Wrigley the famous "Roche-qui-l-tramp-a-lieu" rears its naked head to a height of 1,500 feet perpendicularly from the water's edge. This native designation has been translated by McConnell, the Dominion surveyor, to mean "The Rock by the River." Near the Rock the Mackenzie is half a mile in width, and there is a good clear bottom across the entire width, safe for the steamer in any place. The country is quite mountainous for a long distance, beginning above Fort Wrigley, by the Nahanni river, and around the Rock there are also many other peaks of so nearly the same height. The Nahanni range is a spur of the Rockies, which runs far from the west, and then for a long piece close to and parallel with the river.

About fifty miles above Fort Norman there is another tributary, the Gravel river, which saw strange scenes during the mad rush for the Klondike a few years ago. A large number of the prospectors got discouraged when they reached here and stopped at Fort Norman to take the return trip to their homes. The colder spirit pushed on, took a long portage to the southwest, crossed the Gravel river, and went northwesterly to the head waters of the Stewart river, and in that roundabout way some of them finally reached the goal of their desires.

On the river bank, just four miles above Fort Norman, there are thin seams of lignite jutting out in the bank, which ever since the country was first discovered by white men, have burned with a faint bluish light. The trappers turn it to good account by using it for a camp fire to boil their kettles over the low flames. When the river rises in the spring the waters drive the fire up the bank, but when the flood subsides the fire again comes down to its former position, where it still burns, though the lignite never seems to be consumed.

Fort Norman is situated at the junction of the Beaver river, a short, swift stream of the purest water, making a distinctly visible current two hundred yards in width, for a long distance out into the muddy waters of the Mackenzie which is here two and a half miles in width. At the foot there are two missions, one Catholic and the other Protestant, where a number of people congregate at opportune times. As at all the other posts there are a large number of what are known as "free traders" living near Fort Norman, who sell their furs independently of the company.

Bear Rock is passed four miles below Fort Norman, and it reminds the traveller of the "Rock by the River" in formation, and is but one hundred feet in altitude. The Indians give this particular rock the classical name of the "Wind's Nest," on account of the fierce winds that nearly always blow and roar around the peak.

The most wonderful rock seen along the whole course is the "Wolverine Rock," close by the river and about sixty miles above Fort Good Hope. Around this stone centres a most interesting legend, which has been handed down for many generations by the Indians of the north. The story runs that long, long ago a tragedy in animal life was the cause of the stony animal sitting day by day, a lonely sentinel in the barren land. An immense wolverine had killed two young beavers, and the devoted mother in frantic rage and grief, pursued the murderer. The wolverine fled before the righteous wrath of the outraged parent, and would not come to bay in spite of the repeated demands by the pursuer that the battle be held in the open. The wolverine ran up to the top of a high rock, and from that safe position laughed at the threats of the mother beaver. At last after many vain attempts to bring on a battle with the destroyer of her young, she called upon the Great Spirit for aid. The wolverine for his heinous crime

Fertile Farms Lands Near Alberta's Capital

Leduc, 20 miles south of Edmonton, on the C. & E. Railway, is noted for its rich agricultural lands, and large production of wheat and oats, of first-class quality. Cattle-raising and dairy are also important industries, and large quantities of butter and eggs are marketed at this point. The country is partly wooded, and there are large coal deposits in the district; also abundance of water at from 12 to 30 feet in depth. There are numerous lakes, one being partly within the town limits. Fish and game are plentiful.

Homestead lands may be obtained at a distance of 20 miles from town. Other lands range from 36 to 240 acres. The town itself numbers upwards of 400 inhabitants, principally Canadians and Americans, and is now applying for incorporation. The doctors could not relieve him. He used two bottles of Shiloh and was completely cured. It has no equal."

THROUGH NORTHERN CANADA.

was condemned to sit forever, a cold, bleak warning to all criminals in the animal kingdom. The Indians fully believe this legend, and have great respect for the alone, which has been disgraced by the ruthless hands of trappers, who have broken parts of the head.

When within fifty miles of Fort Good Hope, the Sans-Sault rapids are encountered, so called from the fact that in the days of long ago an Indian, in an attempt to shoot the rapids in his canoe, was drowned. The rapids are caused by another spur of the Rocky mountains crossing at this point. The river is very swift for two miles, but there is a good clear channel and the rapids are not dangerous to steamboat navigation. The journey northward from this point is through a rather uninteresting country, and soon the barren lands are entered, where Nature has withdrawn most of her gifts in the plant life. Continuing northward the mountains run in three ranges along the river, and these ranges are the beginning of the real foothills region at the foot of the great mountain range. At the time of the last trip a great many of the peaks were snow-capped and when the morning sun sent its glistering rays across them the effect was beautiful.

Everybody who takes a trip up the Mackenzie river has heard of the Ramparts long before they are reached, and after leaving the rapids they are in a quiver of expectation to see the wonderful work of nature. At last when eight miles above Fort Good Hope the steamer pushes between the limestone cliffs one hundred and eighty feet sheer from the water, and the traveller is in the Ramparts. For six miles the steamer passes through a gorge where the water is 165 feet deep; the channel has been worn into the solid limestone formation by the river during the thousands of years that have passed. Near the lower part of the Ramparts is a most picturesque scene. A small river flowing from the east falls over the cliffs one hundred feet into the Mackenzie, and with the clouds of mist floating in the air, it is most enchanting, while the noise is a miniature of the mighty Niagara.

Two miles further on a stop of the usual length is made at Fort Good Hope, where the place that attracts all visitors to the Catholic mission, the interior of which is most artistically decorated. The mission was founded in 1859 by Pere Grollier, but the next year Pere Petiot, the best known of all the mission workers of the north, went to take charge of the mission accompanied by Pere Seguin. The building of the church and the decoration was largely the work of Pere Petiot, who was in charge of the district for twenty years, and who labored faithfully for the cause of Christianity in the Canadian Northland. The church is a log structure of the style that is known as the post building, and the interior is sealed with tamarack. It is beautifully painted and paneled, and lighted by high narrow windows. The altar is in itself a work of art, being beautifully carved and inlaid. There are no seats, but the small number of worshippers all stand during service.

At this point in the northward trip the steamer is approaching the land of the midnight sun, and by going to the rear of the fort on the 21st day of June, the fiery ball is seen as it lingers for a moment above the rim of the horizon. Below Fort Good Hope the country is uninteresting, and as the banks are very high it is impossible to get a sight of the midnight sun from the decks of the steamer. The boat passes within the Arctic circle at a point nineteen miles below the fort.

Passing up the Peel river which enters the Mackenzie one hundred miles from the Arctic ocean, the course continues for thirty miles. The boat drops anchor at Fort Macpherson and the northward trip is at an end, usually about the 11th of July. At Fort Macpherson the sun goes beneath the horizon on the night of July 13, for the first time in forty-two days, and even then it is only for a very brief space. The long day season is upon the country, and the usual sleeping time is from six o'clock in the morning to three o'clock in the afternoon, as it is at these times, when it is cooler than during the rest of the day that the mosquito is not so industrious. These little insects are very plentiful during the summer months and are the great and almost only drawback to the trip. Fort Macpherson, the most northerly of the Hudson's Bay company posts in Canada, is in 67 degrees 42 minutes north latitude. It is the most northerly settlement of white people in Canada. Around the fort there are a few free traders, and the Loucheux Indians, beside a detachment of the North-west Mounted Police. These Indians receive their name from the fact that the greater part of them are squint-eyed, but they are the finest specimens of the once noble redman to be seen on the whole voyage. At the Red River fort the visitor has his first glimpse of the Eskimo, who come from their haunts on the west coast, one hundred miles to the north, to trade with the company's men at the fort. They come up the river in large numbers in whale boats, obtained from the whalers who winter at Herschel Island, or in their own eskimo boats, in the use of which they are experts. The boat used by the men is called a "kayak," and the woman's boat is the "qajaq," and in the races which the Eskimos put on at the Fort for the benefit of the visitors the women do not by any means have to take a second place to their husbands. The chief articles which the Eskimo wishes to secure are knives, hatchets, saws and other utensils which he can find ready use for in hunting. He is also anxious to get hold of fire arms, but the company's men usually have none to spare. The large, husky Eskimo commands much respect from the visitor who has been accustomed to no other natives but the avaricious Indians, which are to be seen at every fort and are inferior to the natives of the sea-coast.

—Calgary Herald: J. G. Edgar left for Edmonton this morning to assume the management of the branch office of the Dominion Brokerage Company. On retiring from the management of H.B. stores here he was presented with a handsome gold chain and locket by the employees.

—An alarm of fire called the brigade out at 6:30 this morning to the corner of Namayo and Griesbach streets where a small stable on the rear of the lot, occupied by Williamson Brothers, had been started by some mysterious cause and was totally consumed.

—The entertainment committee of the city council and the board of trade, having in hand the arrangements for the conversations in the rink this evening, held an impromptu meeting in the city council chamber this morning, to complete the details. The admission to this evening will be $1, with special invitations to the members and guests of the city.

—R. B. Thompson, of the firm of Johns & Thompson, land dealers of Lloydminster, is in the city today staying at the Windsor. Mr. Thompson believes that Lloydminster is the centre of the finest farming district in the great central plateau and he says that thousands of others have recognized the fact and are crowding in there to secure land. Johns & Thompson are agents for the Hudson's Bay and C. P. R. lands, and have been in Lloydminster since the founding of the town. They report business exceptionally good at the present time.

—The third annual exhibition of the Alberta Poultry and Pet Stock Association as announced in the advertising columns of this issue, will be held in Strathcona next week, 20th, 21st and 22nd. Tuesday will be reserved for the judges until seven o'clock, when the doors will be opened to the public for the evening. Wednesday and Thursday 9 a.m. to 10:30 p.m., will be the two official days. The entries at the show last year in Edmonton were nearly double those of the previous and first year in Strathcona, but this year promises to surpass either. A larger number of exhibits will be in from outside and more distant points than heretofore. The Niblock street school has been selected as the only suitable building to accommodate the exhibits and the public in attendance without crowding. All who are interested in the raising or care of good fowls, dogs or other pet stock should not miss the exhibition. The Provincial Department of Agriculture is assisting the association in every way possible to make the show a success and is providing one of the most experienced poultry men in Canada to deliver addresses and give practical demonstrations during the show, this is a splendid chance, especially for the farmers to get the best information on raising, fattening, dressing for market and production of eggs.

—Two hours of solid fun was enjoyed by over one hundred of the young people in the basement of First Presbyterian church last night. The occasion was an Irish social given by the young people's society, and every feature of the evening was thoroughly Irish. There were some kids from the Emerald Isle, who in their rich brogue told stories of life in the Green Isle in a manner that kept the crowd laughing till they cried. Mr. Day, a tall soldierly-looking chap, who has probably served in the Irish Guards, contributed a song or two. Mr. Dwyer is another of the same type, whose recitations caused most of the laughter, and he was also encircled with a roar of applause. Mr. Doherty with his violin, played some sweet little Irish airs that were very greatly enjoyed. Several young ladies who were present contributed vocal selections. Miss McCrimmon sang "St. Patrick's Day" very enjoyably. Miss Burnett sang most sweetly the pretty Irish song "Rory Darlin'." The famous "Killarney" was sung by Miss Anderson. Miss May Doze recited very well. Rev. Dr. McQueen acted as chairman and Rev. Arch. Ewing, who is leaving the city shortly, spoke a few farewell words, and incidentally told a few Irish stories in a manner that did credit to his Scotch accent.
